

Working with Families to Create an Effective Care Team

Presented by Amy E. Matthews. Amy has worked exclusively in the field of Alzheimer's and related dementia disorders for the past 30 years. Her experience ranges from Adult Day Care and Home Health to working as the original Activity Director in the very first dementia-specific assisted living community in the country and later as Executive Director opening a building in West Orange, NJ.

Placing someone into long-term care can be one of the most difficult decisions a family may have to make, and the interaction between the facility and the family will make or break this relationship.

This program will describe what families often go through before moving a loved one to a Memory Care facility. It will also give staff members tools to create a team that can effectively partner with family members in providing the best possible environment and care for the person living with dementia.
